Broadly Speaking
ABOUT HEALTH AND ITS DETERMINANTS

About this course:

All planning, policies and actions can potentially affect the health of the community. Broadly Speaking is a free training course that brings together people from across local and regional government, the health sector, and a wide variety of other organisations, to unpack the complexities of wellbeing in our population.

Through a series of workshop-based discussions and activities, Broadly Speaking is designed to encourage collaborative action by inspiring you to broaden the role that you play in advocating for improved population health outcomes.

The programme draws on the experiences and knowledge of the participants. Participants are able to look at a relevant issue through a completely different lens, and hear a wide variety of perspectives. Broadly Speaking helps you identify potential opportunities and partners as you plan next steps for positively influencing community wellbeing.

Experienced facilitators and public health practitioners from Community and Public Health deliver the programme over two half-day sessions.

What you will be learning:

Through this course you will:

- Explore factors or ‘broad determinants’ that impact upon the health of individuals, communities and populations.
- Consider actions that can address the causes of poor health and health inequities.
- Identify opportunities to plan for positive population health outcomes that are relevant to your role and workplace.
- Learn the power of wider conversations to bring about change.
- Leave with a plan of action – knowing what your next step will be.

"The training was thought provoking and well facilitated, broadening my understanding of the factors that shape the health of our community. The materials and format sparked important conversations about how we can bring others to the table, and work together to create a healthier and more liveable city."
